You'll pay more for local ingredients - you're paying for the farmer's energy costs to grow the food.

Supermarkets transport produce around the world - that's bound to push prices up.

Local farmers still use fuel so there will still be pollution.

What do you think?

Supermarket produce must be more expensive - it's travelled further so you're paying for that fuel and packaging.

You'd have a limited diet if you stuck to local produce.

Food travelling further = more pollution. We need to avoid that.

There's more choice in a supermarket so food is cheaper.
